

AIS Technology's Give It A Try! Tip Internet Explorer – Printing PART of a webpage

Did you ever wish you could print out just PART of the webpage? You don't need the entire page – just one little section. Well accomplishing that goal is a lot easier than you may realize!!!!

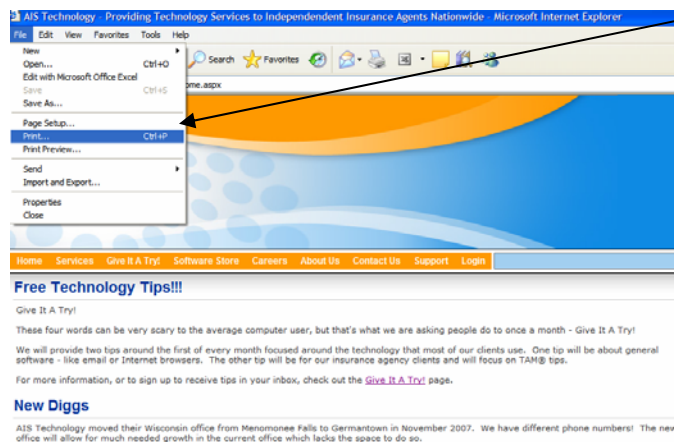

The most difficult part of printing part of a webpage is highlighting the area you want. Because different web developers use different page designs and technologies, so every page can be different – even within the same company's website.

Things to watch out for when highlighting text from a webpage...

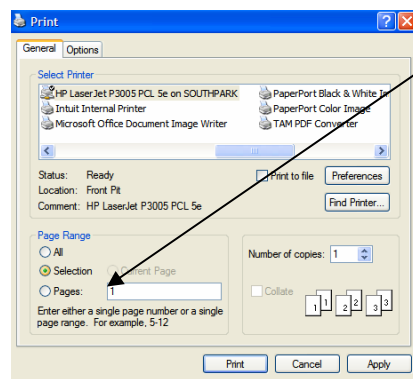

Columns – If there are columns on a page, and you want information from both columns, you often end up highlighting more than you want. Try highlighting information from each column separately.

Pictures – Sometimes what LOOKS like a word, or an article, is really a picture pasted into the webpage, so highlighting just a portion of the picture is next to impossible without special software.

Once you have used your mouse to successfully highlight the part of the webpage you want to print, from the Menu Bar at the top of the browser, choose File, then Print.

Then in the Print Range box, choose Selection – then Print.

And that's all there is to printing part of a webpage, so...
